MASHARABIYA PATTERN

HISTORY & CONCEPT

HISTORY

Mashrabiya is derived from the trilateral root Š-R-B, which generally denotes drinking or absorbing.

Mashrabiya also either Shanshul or Rushan, is the Arabic term given to a type of projecting oriel window enclosed with carved wood latticework located on a higher story of a building, often lined with stained glass. The mashrabiya is an element of traditional Arabic architecture used since the Middle Ages up to the mid-20th century.

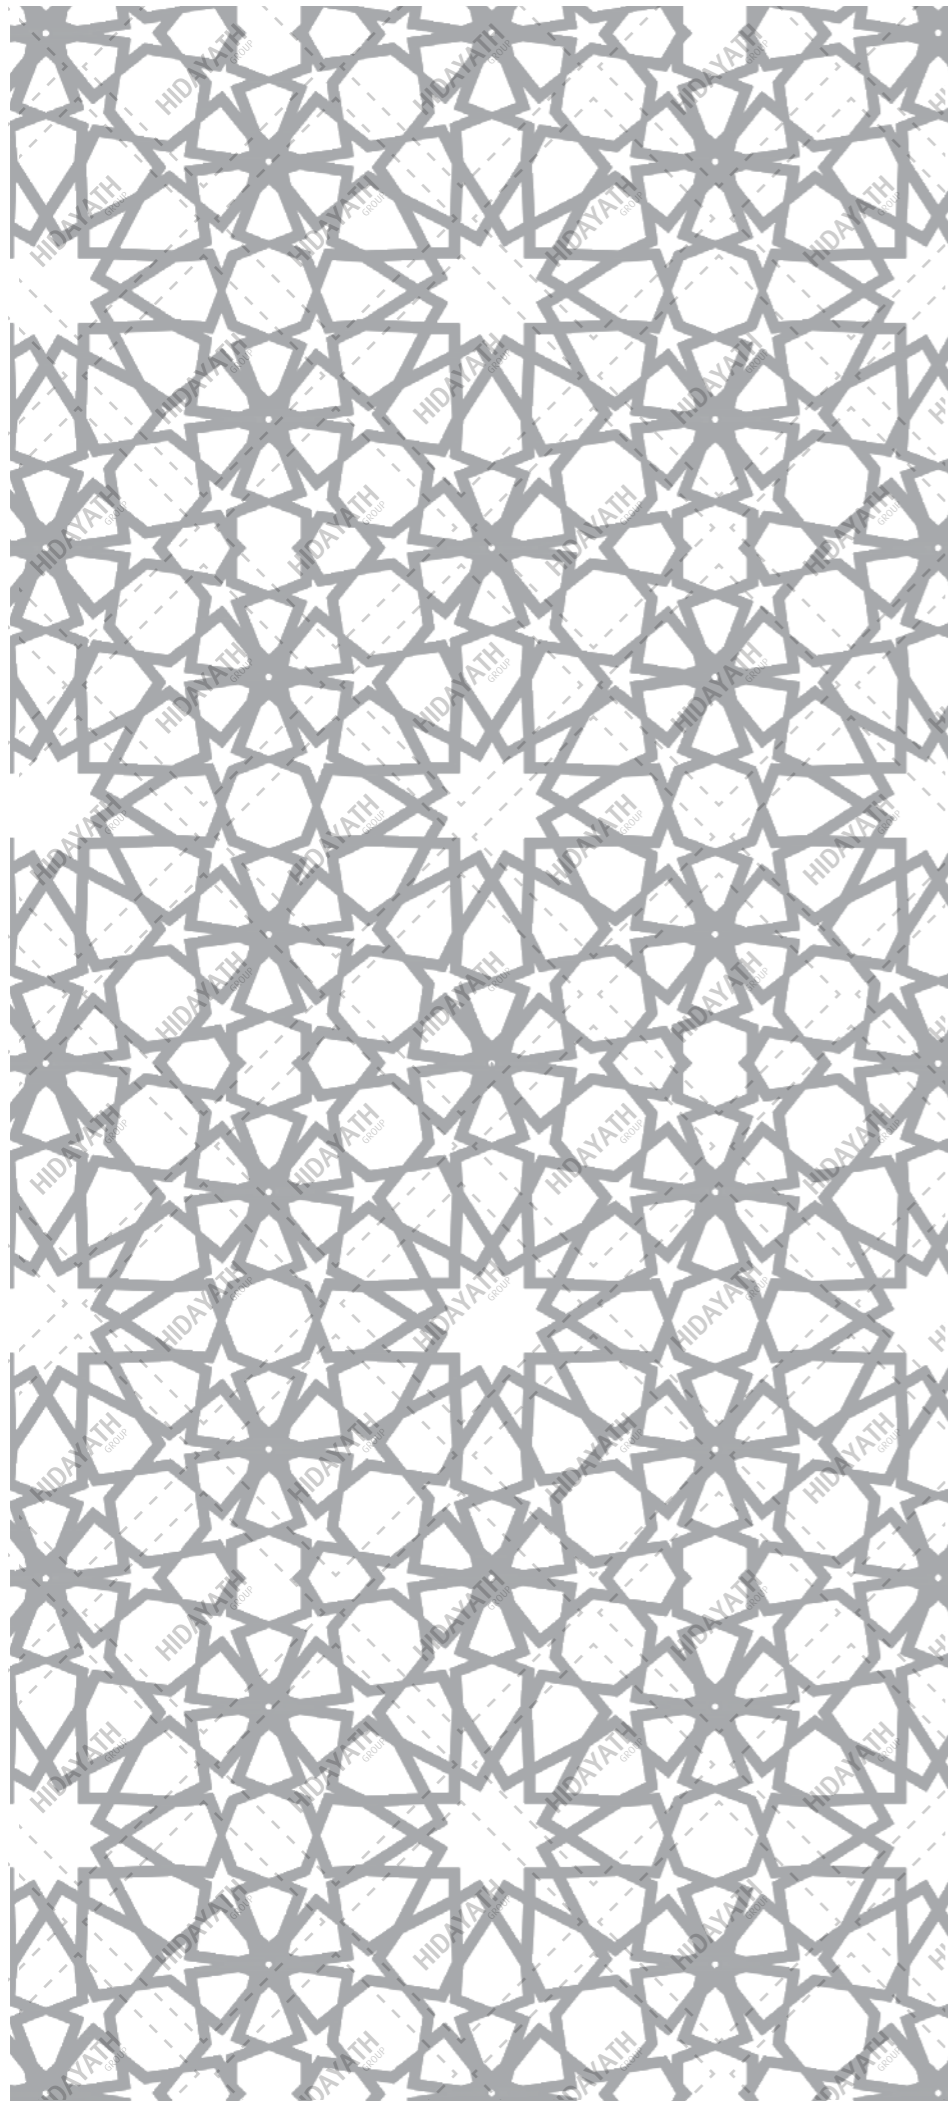

Mashrabiya, as traditional architectural marvels, were mostly used in houses and palaces although sometimes in public buildings such as hospitals, inns, schools and government buildings. They are found mostly in the eastern part of the Arab world, but some types of similar windows are also found in the western part as well. They are very prevalent in Iraq, the Levant, Hejaz and Egypt. They are mostly found in urban settings and rarely in rural areas. Basra is often called "the city of Shanasheel".

CONCEPT

Masharabiya designs are achieved with the use of chemicals that eat away the exposed surface creating a matt, dull finished area with the contrasting base finish.

These finishes are most attractive when used with a contrasting base finish. Eg. Base finish of Brush with Masharabiya or Base finish Mirror with Masharabiya, etc.

Please tour through the catalogue to view the different design patterns we have readily available. Custom designs can also be made after approval of design by our production department.
